REPORTED MISSING GIRL HOME

Two Frankfort High School Pupils Reported Missing

BULLETIN:
Miss Doris Kidder, 15 year old Frankfort school girl who was reported missing by her father last week, returned home Tuesday after visiting for a few days with relatives in Michigan. When she did not come home Friday night, Mr. Kidder became alarmed and notified Sheriff Walker that his daughter was missing.

The young lady failed to notify her parents of her intention of going on a visit and for several days they did not know what had become of her.

Frankfort has had a sensation all of its own the past week when two well known high school students, Doris Kidder and William Green, were reported missing. On Saturday, V. M. Kidder, Michigan Central agent at Frankfort, reported to Sheriff Walker and Assistant State's Attorney Austin, that his daughter, Doris, 15 years old, a freshman at the Joliet high school, had left home Friday morning and had not returned.

William Green, 17 years old, a junior at the Joliet high school, has also disappeared, according to Mr. Kidder.

Records at the high school at the two have been absent since Monday. The disappearance of the second term and had been temporarily dropped. According to Mr. Kidder, however, his daughter had been coming to Joliet every day last week and he thought she was going to school.

According to Kidder and several of the boy's teachers, young Green writes verse, reads philosophy, and ranks himself as an intellectual.

Since Doris enrolled in high school last summer, her father told the sheriff, she and Green had traveled back and forth together in the same bus, and Green always brought her home.

The girl is described as being about 5 feet 5 inches in height; weighs 135 pounds; dark brown hair, bobbed; blue eyes; wore a brown coat with a fur trimmed collar and a tan turban.

When Green left home he was wearing a dark blue suit, a brown overcoat and a brown felt hat with a flat crown. He is described as being about 5 feet 9 inches in height; fair complexion; slender build; brown hair long, combed in the approved "sheik" mode.

Green has been living with his grandmother, Mrs. Mary Green of Frankfort, who adopted him some time ago and gave him her name. The boy's father is Frank Randall, formerly of Frankfort, who is now said to be living in Chicago.

Radio Disturber Is Located

For sometime Mokena radio fans have been complaining of a great deal of interference and thought someone was broadcasting this interference when they were listening in. The radio fans were determined to find out who the "culprit" really was and had decided to engage an expert on radios to find out who was causing the trouble they were experiencing.

Fred Hentsch who has been engaged in building radio sets, discovered that the interference had the sound of some kind of instrument that was making a humming sound. He called up Mrs. Hugh Deadmore, local manager of the Illinois Bell Telephone Co., and told her of his experience. He asked her to shut off the switchboard power. She did so and he peculiar

To Dedicate New Tinley Park Public School Feb. 7th

The new $30,000 school at Tinley Park is to be officially dedicated with a special program on the afternoon of February 7th commencing at three o'clock. State Supr., of Public Instruction Blair of Springfield, Mr. Hart one of the Cook County Country Life Directors and perhaps Miss McClaughry, will take the leading roles on the program. The pupils of the various rooms will also take part in the exercises. The students have real snappy class yells and have cheer leaders so they can do their parts in a real snappy style. Everyone is invited to attend these exercises. A musical program is also to be part of the exercises.

Rev. Flynn Comes to Tinley Park M. E.

The Tinley Park M. E. church is showing a decided step ahead by having a regular pastor assigned to them. Both morning and evening services will be held every Sunday commencing with the coming Sunday. Rev. Mr. Flynn is the new pastor. The morning services are announced for 11 a. m. and the evening services for 7:30 p. m. before they speak. Most of the speech defects are impulsive. The live church worker and Mrs. Flynn is said to be an accomplished musician. From present indications this church will be heard from in quite progressive terms this year.

New Lenox Agent Goes to Silvis

Robert Campbell who has served as agent for the Rock Island railroad at New Lenox for the past 5 or 6 years, has been assigned to a new position at Silvis and will take up his new duties the first of next month. Mr. Campbell made many friends in New Lenox during his stay here and they regret to see him leave.

noise ceased. When the power was turned on again the interference was noticed again.

After careful investigation it was found that the mischief maker was an instrument known as a pole changer used in connection with the switchboard ringing system.

The instrument makes a peculiar interrupting sound and was heard plainer over the radio in said than it can be heard at the telephone office. The matter was taken up with the telephone officials by Mrs. Deadmore and they told her that as similar complaints had been coming in from other towns they had their engineering department look into the matter and they had found the cause of the disturbance and had provided a way to overcome the trouble complained of.

Material to be used in making a change that will eliminate the difficulty will be received soon. The Telephone Company is ready to help out the radio fans where ever possible so they can enjoy their programs without any interference from the company's instruments.

May Broadcast Church Services

The Marley Church folk have at all times shown a real progressive community spirit and their latest and biggest move in this direction is the plan to have their community services broadcasted. At present estimates are being received on the cost of operating a local broadcast-

The CLEARING HOUSE

The Editor is in receipt of a letter signed "News Reader" in reply to an article appearing in The Clearing House column, but as the name of the writer of this letter is not signed to it, the letter cannot be published. If the writer will send in his or her name the letter will be published in full in The Clearing House next week. The Editor must insist that all letters must be signed by the writer of such letters and the names of the writers will not be published in connection with their articles unless so requested. All newspaper offices taboo the unsigned letter as a matter of editorial precaution.

The identity of any one writing letters to The News-Bulletin for publication will not be revealed by The Editor. Always sign your name to any article sent in for publication and state whether you wish your name published or not in connection with such article and your wishes will be respected.

THE EDITOR

Editor Clearing House:
The article appearing in this column last week was a beaver as the slang phrase goes and of course your readers approved it as it told the truth. But why pick on only one fellow? What about the fellows in Mokena who are said to be manufacturing and selling these birds for $12 per gallon? These are the birds that should be cleaned up next for as long as the dam poison is being made saloonkeepers will buy it to sell to weak minded fools to drink and kill themselves with.

If the Federal Agents would just sift the rumors current in Mokena regarding the moonshine industry they might provoke a bigger sensation than the last one was.

A MOKENA CITIZEN

The case of Philip Yunker who was recently arrested on a serious charge preferred against him by a Tinley Park girl came up for a hearing in Evanston the forepart of the week and has been continued.

The defendant was released on a $2200 bond shortly after his arrest.

Timber Wolves In Frankfort Twp.

Mokena and Frankfort are "hot up" over the report that timber wolves are being seen in the wood land in this section. It is said that there are more than one wolf and that they are feeding on rabbits, chickens and young pigs. One lone grey wolf has been reported seen a number of times of late. The past week an old and a young wolf were said to have been seen on the farm of John Baumgartner.

Efforts have been made by local hunters to nab these wolves, but thus far they have proved too elusive. As long as they are not starved it is said these wolves do not attack human beings, but no one wants to take a chance on this idea. The wolves have been tracked thru the woods and fields. How these wolves got into this part of the country is not known.

It is said that quite a number of timber wolves are to be found in the vicinity of Channahon.

ing station so that the church services and other activities can be broadcasted as is being done by a large number of city churches.

Schmdiknecht and Scheer Cases Are Dismissed Fri.

The cases of Fred Schmediknecht police chief of Tinley Park, and Valentine Scheer, contractor of the same place, on complaint of Joe Greco were called for trial by Justice David H. Shapiro at 10 o'clock on Friday morning, Jan. 30 to which time the cases had been continued at several former hearings by the State who claimed that they were not ready. It was brought out at the hearing before the court on Jan. 30th that the defendants were in court and ready for trial with all of their witnesses and had been each time. Justice Shapiro then read a letter from the State's Attorney's office requesting another continuance for ten days, until Feb. 9th so as to give the State of Illinois more time in which to investigate and prepare its case. Attorneys Francis A. Harper and J. C. K. Lindhout protested long and strongly against further delay, and pointed out these men were both wronged, and the court after having heard the arguments held that the State should be ready for trial and the judge refused to continue the cases and dismissed them.

The court room was completely filled with friends of the defendants from Tinley Park and other places who congratulated them upon their winning their liberty. Many witnesses who were present and friends of the defendants are convinced that the prosecution was entirely unjust and based on a lie.

These two men say it is peculiar that the Assistant States Attorney Borden and Judge Barassa representing Greco, in they had a good case against these worthy citizens had to have so much time in which to prepare. This paper congratulates the two defendants upon standing by their guns and demanding speedy and immediate trial and for their victory in thus clearing their names.

This is another instance to show that just because a person is arrested and accused of a crime, is no reason that would make him guilty and it is well for the public to suspend their judgment and in fact stand by their friends who may be arrested until they are proven absolutely guilty.

The defendants say if they are re-arrested they will continue the fight to a finish.

Valentine-Bunco

A Valentine Bunco will be given on Feb. 14th by the Catholic church at Orland. There will be a door prize and many other excellent bunco awards. Everyone is invited.

Heroism of 14 Year old Girl Saves Home From Fire

The heroism of a fourteen year old girl saved the farm home of George Young at Alpine from being destroyed by fire last Thursday.

The young girl, the daughter of Mr. Young was in a room adjoining the kitchen about noon when she heard a sound like the crackling of flames coming from the kitchen. Upon investigating she was horrified to find that a waste paper basket had caught fire and the flames had caught on a curtain and from there had set fire to the wall paper. Being alone at home she knew she did not have time to call help so she grabbed a pail and ran out into the farm yard where a big stock tank full of water was near at hand and formed her single handed bucket brigade and successfully fought the blaze alone and extinguished it. She had to carry a number of pails of water before it was possible to quench the flames.

Mrs. J. C. Urch of New Lenox Dies Suddenly Sunday

Mrs. J. C. Urch, a life long resident of New Lenox, died quite suddenly at her home in New Lenox Sunday morning at 3 o'clock after only a few days illness.

Last Wednesday she had attended the meeting of the New Lenox Home Improvement Club and on Thursday afternoon she was taken with a chill which later developed into pneumonia which was the immediate cause of death. Mrs. Urch had been in poor health for some time before.

Mrs. Carrie E. Urch nee Lewis was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Corden Lewis and was born in Freeport, Illinois July 8, 1858 and while yet a small child she came to New Lenox township where the Lewis family settled on the Studman farm. When 12 years old she settled in the village of New Lenox with her parents and attended the New Lenox public school.

In June 1881 she was united in marriage with John C. Urch, the wedding being the first one to take place in the old M. E. church that stood on the site now occupied by the Hilton dwellings. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Mr. Hoyer. To this union one child was born but died in infancy.

For 32 years Mr. and Mrs. Urch lived in the little white cottage near the New Lenox school and in July of the past year they moved to a new home just across the street from the old home.

Mrs. Urch was beloved by all the community and she always was deeply interested and gave freely of her time and effort toward any cause that was for the benefit of her community.

The funeral services were held Tuesday afternoon from the late home to the Grace Episcopal church at two o'clock. Rev. Mr. Applegate of Hobart, Indiana, a former pastor of this church and a life long friend of the family officiating. In the course of his oration he showed that human sympathy cannot raise the load of the bereaved, but that out of the deep sorrow come beautiful lessons for the living. One outstanding remark was "at the right anywhere, any time" which is a great truth. Rev.

Arthur Lambrecht Sings For Radio

Arthur Lambrecht, well known sweet singer of Frankfort has had a rather distinct honor conferred on him by being requested to sing for station WCBN, Chicago this coming Sunday evening. He will sing several songs for this station. Mr. Lambrecht has been heard on the radio before having sung from the Chicago Heights broadcasting station a number of times before. Mr. Lambrecht has a wonderful voice and may be a second Caruso some day. He was formerly a member of the News-Bulletin staff.

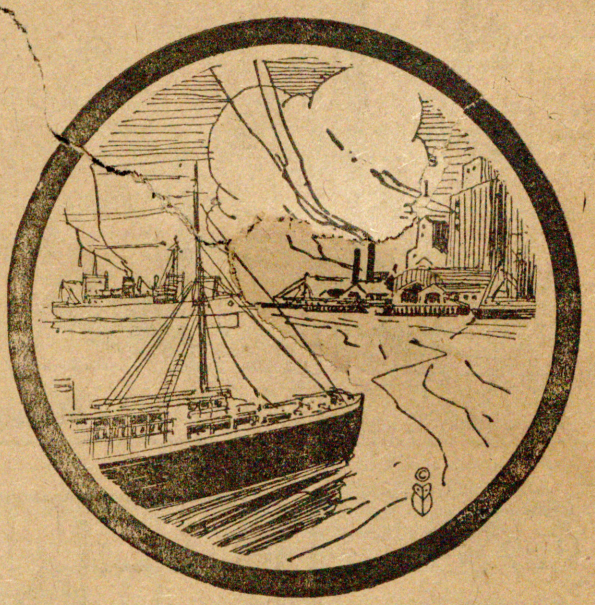

Mr. Applegate said the entire life of the departed could be summed up in one word "Faithful"—faithful to her home, to her community and to her church of which was organist for thirty years. This is the last chapter closed of a useful and cheerful life whose memory will always be revered by those who who knew her best.

Burial took place in Maplewood cemetery at New Lenox.

The deceased is survived by her husband, and four nieces, she being the last member of the Lewis family to pass on, her brother Prof. Leslie Lewis of Chicago dying two years ago.

The Holiness of God

By REV. JOHN C. PAGE
Teacher of Bible Doctrine, Moody Bible Institute, Chicago.

TEXT—Exalt ye the Lord our God and worship at His holy hill for the Lord our God is holy.—Ps. 99:9.

Rev. J. C. Page.

All that God is may be summed up in the word "holy." When the Psalmist declares in the words of this text that "the Lord our God is holy," he has said all that can be said in a sentence concerning the character of God. Holiness is not to be regarded as an attribute or quality of the Divine Being, but rather the sum-total of all attributes and qualities.

As light embraces and includes all the colors of nature, so does the holiness of God include all such attributes and qualities as love, righteousness and mercy.

The spiritual apprehension of this truth has a peculiar and special effect upon one's life. In the first place, it corrects erroneous thoughts concerning God. It is easy, even in Christian thinking, to conceive of the Divine Being as a reservoir of good things and to sing lustily, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow," but our God is to be worshiped and praised not only for what He gives but for what He is. The words of the text are suggestive at this point, "Exalt ye the Lord our God and worship at His holy hill, for the Lord our God is holy."

The reason here given for exalting and worshipping Jehovah is the fact that He is holy. Too often our worship sinks to a lower plane. Again, in matters belonging to our redemption it is easy to think of the grace of God in salvation as merely providing some escape from the fearful consequences of sin, forgetting that the great purpose of God in redemption transcends this, as indicated in Romans 8:29—"Whom He did foreknow, He also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of His Son"—The whole process and purpose of redemption has this in view as its ultimate object—"to be conformed to the image of His Son." This means holiness for us. According to II Peter 1:4, we have been made "partakers of the divine nature," which is a holy nature. As the late Dr. A. T. Pierson passed away in death, he was heard repeating the words of Hebrews 12:10, "partakers of His holiness." This phrase of redemption must never be lost sight of.

The spiritual perception of the truth of God's holiness removes all self-righteousness, pride and self-conceit. Men in the heart of Africa never realized that they were black until they saw the face of a white man. So it is with many of us. Our moral darkness is unknown until we see something of the absolute purity and moral excellence of God as suggested by this word "holy." When the holiness of God was seen and understood by the prophet Isaiah, he cried out as one in distress, "Woe is me for I am undone." Prior to this experience, he, like other good men, possessed a measure of self-complacency, but with the vision of God's holiness, there came the vision of himself as he appeared in the light of that holiness. The experience of Job was similar. Job was a good man but after he had met God, he uttered the remarkable words: "I have heard of Thee by the hearing of the ear, but now mine eye seeth Thee, wherefore I abhor myself and repent in dust and ashes."

No man thinks well of himself after he has met with God. He is ready to say, "God forbid that I should glory save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ." The holiness of God not only corrects our thinking and removes self-righteousness and pride, but it explains the Cross of Calvary. In the very nature of God as the Holy One, there is eternal antagonism towards all that is wrong, deceitful and false. Sin is not an error of mortal man, it is a positive evil entering into human life, in thought, word and deed, incurring guilt and bringing condemnation. It is impossible for the holy God to tolerate it. He must judge it and the only possible sentence of judgment is that of condemnation. The judgment must fall somewhere—where shall it fall? The Bible is very clear in this matter. It's answer is "The Lord laid on Him the iniquity of us all," "for the transgression of my people was He stricken." "He made Him to be sin for us Who knew no sin." No wonder that the aged apostle looking at the Cross of Calvary from a standpoint of deep spiritual experience and with the pen of inspiration writes, "Herein is love, not that we love God, but that He loved us and sent His Son to be the propitiation for our sins." God, who is holy, cannot be unconcerned about sinners. When His holiness required, His love provided. God sent forth Christ to be a propitiation, to declare His righteousness in redeeming us from sin. The infinite love of God provides an infinite sacrifice that through it we might be delivered from the penalty and power of sin and be made partakers of His holiness.

Lesson for February 1

THE VINE AND THE BRANCHES

LESSON TEXT—John 15:1-17.
GOLDEN TEXT—"He that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit."—John 15:5.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Being Friends of Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Vine and the Branches.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Fruit-Bearing Lives.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Union With Christ.

Under the beautiful allegory of the vine and the branches Jesus set forth the spiritual oneness of Himself and His disciples.

1. The Relationship of Jesus and the Father to the Disciple (vv. 1-3).

1. Jesus the Source of the Disciple's Life (v. 1). He is the true vine. Through the incarnation Jesus identified Himself with humanity, and by virtue of His atoning death and resurrection it is possible for the believer to be a partaker of His life, so that between the disciple and his Lord there is a community of life. As the vine pours its life into the branch, so Christ pours His life into the believer. Our salvation is eternal life because it is the life of the eternal Son in us.

2. The Father Has in His Hands the Discipline of the Disciple (v. 1). "The Father is the husbandman." Just as the culture of the vine is in the hands of a husbandman so the discipline of the believer's life is in the hands of the Father. In this disciplinary process He

(a) Removes the unfruitful branch (v. 2). He does not take the trouble to prune the fruitless branch. The nominal church member, the mere professor, He removes.

(b) Purges the fruitful branch that it may produce more fruit (v. 2). He restrains our natural tendencies and desires in order that the virtues of the Lord, the fruits of the Spirit, may shine forth.

3. The instrument by which the pruning is accomplished is Jesus' words (v. 3). The disciples already were cleansed by Christ's words, for Judas the traitor had been cast out. If the believer's life is to be fruitful in character and service the pruning knife, Christ's words, must be intelligently and regularly applied.

II. The Conditions of Fruit Bearing (vv. 4-7).

The supreme object in pruning, the culture of the vine, is fruit.

1. Abiding in Christ (vv. 4-6). As the branches draw sap and life from the vine, so believers must abide in Christ, from whom they derive their purity, strength and wisdom. Indeed, it is a mutual abiding, the disciple in Christ and Christ in the disciple. It is Christ's life expressing itself through the believer. The one thus indwelt by Christ will bear much fruit. So great is the displeasure of the Lord with lifeless, unfruitful branches that they are to be "cast forth," "withered," even burned (v. 6).

2. Christ's Words Abide in Us (v. 7). So mighty is the power of the one who abides in Christ and in whom His words abide that Heaven can withhold no gift from him.

III. The Blessed Issue of a Fruitful Life (vv. 8-17).

1. The Glorification of the Father (v. 8). Through much fruit-bearing, the Father will be glorified (Matt. 5:16).

2. Credentials of Discipleship (v. 8). The only way to prove that one is a child of God is to manifest the characteristics of God in one's acts and service.

3. Abiding in Christ's Love and Keeping His Commandments (vv. 9, 10). The way to abide in Christ's love is to keep His commandments. The one who neglects the words of Christ is destitute of His love. It is folly to talk of being in the love of Christ while disobeying His teachings.

4. Fulness of Joy (v. 11). The way to have fulness of joy is to have Christ's joy in us.

5. Loving one another (vv. 12, 13). The one who abides in Christ and has the life of Christ flowing into him will live a life of love, will love his fellowman, especially his brother in Christ.

6. Friends of Christ (vv. 14, 15). Christ's friends do whatsoever He commands. Being thus obedient He takes us into His confidence and makes known unto us the Heavenly Father's will.

7. Perpetual Fruit-Bearing in Love, With Power in Prayer (vv. 16, 17).

Physical Vigor

Physical weakness is not a sign of spiritual power. All other things considered, the man or woman who enjoys physical vigor will be able to accomplish more than those who are puny and ill.

PRESIDENT ASKS CUT IN EXPENSES

Urges U. S. Officials to Help Government Save $62,000,000.

Washington.—The now familiar economy theme, with a plea for still further cuts in government expenditures, was the keynote of President Coolidge's speech before the semi-annual meeting of the business organization of the government.

The meeting, which was attended by the heads of all branches of the government service which have a hand in the spending of the people's money, was broadcast by radio, the first time one of the government's business meetings has been sent on the air. The President said:

"So far as it is within my power, I propose to continue my efforts for economy in federal expenditures. What we have done must be considered only the beginning."

He pointed out that expenditures of the fiscal years 1921 reached $5,538,000,000, while those for the present year will probably be kept within $3,534,000,000, a reduction of $2,004,000,000 in four years.

The President asked officials to keep the government costs for the present year within the three-billion-dollar limit. On the basis of present estimates, this will require a cut of about $62,000,000 by the end of June.

During the same four years, he continued, there has been a reduction in the public debt of approximately $3,198,000,000. This has resulted in a reduction of the annual interest on the debt from $999,000,000 to $865,000,000, a saving of $134,000,000 each year.

Tax reductions therefore have amounted to about $2,000,000,000 yearly, according to the President.

"If the practice of economy is not popular, the results of it are viewed with tremendous satisfaction," he said. "Let those who are inclined to scoff at it, those who are inclined to refer to it as cheese paring, look at the results it has accomplished. They will find there an answer which is complete and overwhelming."

"No longer are the funds appropriated by congress regarded as the minimum amount to be expended. Every dollar that is saved by careful administration adds to the amount by which taxes may be reduced in the future."

"It is practical economy which I have in mind and which we must practice. I had rather talk of saving pennies, and save them, than theorize in millions and save nothing."

"Our nation is prosperous. Its prosperity is due largely to the economy which has been effected in the cost of government. It is this economy that has encouraged business, abolished unemployment, made wages high and work plentiful."

"We are evidently entering upon an era of increasing business activity and material prosperity. With increasing business we can surely depend upon increasing revenues. I have heretofore indicated my purpose that growing revenues shall not be absorbed in unwarranted increases in federal expenditures."

"As the country grows, an honest, reasonable increase in the cost of government is expected. That increase, however, must not be timed to keep step, dollar for dollar, with the increase in revenue."

The President said that if the budget program was upheld by congress in this session, he would be able to recommend further tax cuts in the next budget.

In order to carry out this project, he asked the officials to keep the government costs for the present year within the three-billion-dollar limit.

For 1924 he prophesied a surplus of more than $373,000,000, adding that any increase in receipts or decrease in expenditures would swell this surplus for the benefit of the taxpayer.

As a part of the economy program, President Coolidge recommended a cut in the government's payroll, and the elimination of unnecessary employees.

Brig. Gen. Herbert M. Lord, director of the budget, also addressed the meeting.

Twins Born to Daughter of Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt

New York.—Twins, one a boy and the other a girl, have been born to Mrs. Barbara Rutherford Nichols, younger daughter of the dowager Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt. The vivacious Mrs. Nichols, who last August became the bride of Winfield J. Nichols, lieutenant of Pierre A. Bernard, omnipotent Oom of the mysterious Tantrik love cult at Nyack, is at a private maternity hospital.

Members of the Vanderbilt family sought to keep news of the event secret, but Bernard, the great Loving Guru, friend of Mrs. Vanderbilt and the Vanderbilt girls for many years, had no such desire.

Wiring in Your Plans

In building a house the plumbing is planned as a unit and made complete. Electrical wiring should be planned the same way—in full, for the whole house.

That is the economical and practical way to do it. When you are building a home and looking forward to enjoyment of its comforts you cannot omit providing for the fullest measure of electrical conveniences.

Certainly it is infinitely better to put in all your wiring at the time of building your house than it is to do so after the house is completed. We will work right with you to make your house wiring complete. Without charge to you, we will go over your plans and submit estimate of what proper wiring will cost.

Or, you can obtain same from any electrical contractor.

Another Theory of the Flood.
A new theory of the flood has been discovered in South Africa. Hydrographers investigating the waterways of Uganda have found indications that Lake Victoria and other central African lakes were at one time vast inland seas, which a little excess of rainfall would cause to overflow into the lands to the north. The discovery of primitive stone implements along the old water levels prove these to have been within the "human" period.

Stop Night Coughing This Simple Way

People who have persistent, annoying coughing spells at night, and who through loss of valuable sleep are weakening their systems and laying themselves open to dangerous infections, can stop their distressing trouble promptly by a very simple treatment. Hundreds who have hardly been able to rest at all for coughing, have gotten their full night's sleep the very first time they tried it.

The treatment is based on a remarkable prescription known as Dr. King's New Discovery for Coughs. You simply take a teaspoonful at night before retiring and hold it in your throat for 15 or 20 seconds before swallowing it, without following with water. The prescription has a double action. It not only soothes and heals soreness and irritation, but it quickly loosens and removes the phlegm and congestion which are the direct cause of the coughing. The result is that you usually sleep as soundly as a babe the very first night, and the entire cough condition goes in a very short time.

The prescription is highly recommended for coughs, chest colds, hoarseness and bronchitis, and is wonderful for children's coughs and spasmodic croup—no harmful drugs. Economical, too, as the dose is only one teaspoonful. It is on sale at all good druggists. Ask for

GREAT MENACE

M. A. Traylor, Chairman, Economic Policy Commission, American Bankers Association

A cross section of American thought today, as reflected in private conversation, public addresses and through our multitude of avenues of thought distribution, would reveal perhaps as great a confusion of ideas and purposes as confounded the assembled throng at Babylon.

It is not high time that the bankers demand the preservation and practice of those sound fundamental principles which are so absolutely essential to the welfare of the nation? Bankers and business men of the country have little right to complain of the prevalence of unsound economic theories, of radical political tendencies and paralyzingly foolish legislation, so long as they maintain the silent or defensive attitude which has characterized them in the past.

A few days ago I heard a gentleman, supposedly well versed in politics, say that if the charter of the Federal Reserve System were up for renewal or extension at the present time, he doubted very much if Congress would prolong the life of the System, and certainly if it did would only do so after such amendments and modifications as would destroy the basic principles underlying the present structure.

A real menace is involved in this suggestion, but I wonder how much we have done or will do to acquaint the voting public, who will eventually elect the Congress who will pass upon this proposition, with the actual facts of the case. Notwithstanding mistakes that have been made in the administration of the System, most of the opposition to it is based not upon facts but upon twisted stories and the absolute falsehoods of the office-seeker, who has found it easy and popular to attack and blame the System for all the ills, alleged and imagined, which may affect any particular group.

Banking a Science
The science of banking is not an accident. It rests upon principles as fundamental as the laws of the universe. Long, technical and practical experience is absolutely essential to the safe management of any financial institution, and yet what is the result of the political assaults that have been made upon the Federal Reserve, the greatest piece of financial machinery in this country? The people from time to time are electing to office men whose chief claim to their support is that they will see to it that every banker is driven from the Federal Reserve Board and that the Board shall be constituted in a majority or wholly of those coming from the particular bloc the politician alleges he represents. There should be a diversity of interest represented upon the Board, but that the majority of the Board should ever be constituted of other than men thoroughly trained by practical experience in financial management is to me utterly unthinkable and if practiced will in the end lead to a complete disintegration of the strength of the System, if not to a worse conclusion.

We do not select bankers for our playboys or bricklayers for our artists. We demand specialists for every character of specific activity and the welfare of our whole population demands that the credit power of the nation, without which no business can live, must be committed likewise to the hands of experts in its use and distribution.

It is a pretty and catching phrase to declaim that if you destroy the agriculture of the country grass will grow in the streets of your cities, but it is no more true than to say that if you destroy the credit structure of your country the products of your labor will rot in the fields and the machinery of your industry and commerce rust into inactivity and decay. Therefore, let us, who are in no small measure responsible for the banking and financial welfare of the nation, give unstintingly of our time to the propagation of sound economic policies.

FOR FARM PROGRESS

The Agricultural Committee of the North Carolina Bankers Association, in conference with officials of the College of Agriculture, recently adopted the following program for active work in the state:

1. Aid county agents in determining definite objectives for each community and organize county in community groups to carry them out.
2. Give each county a definite objective through an organization of farmers, bankers, and business men.
3. Secure from state and federal sources assistance in determining definite objectives and in giving instruction to members of community and county organizations.
4. Organize bankers, merchants, and farmers where desirable into better marketing units.
5. Secure co-operation of State College in surveying agricultural conditions and giving instructions through its specialists in organization, farm management, production, and marketing.

The New York Bankers Association describes in a recent bulletin the campaign under foot to foster club work among boys and girls in the rural schools. Prizes have been donated by a number of the former presidents of the Association to be awarded to the children, the communities, and the banks interested in the work.

TINLEY PARK

Several birthday parties were celebrated last week in this vicinity. On Tuesday Mrs. Chas. Mager celebrated her sixty-fourth birthday anniversary. Bunco was played and a very enjoyable time was reported by all. Mr. Wm. Witt celebrated his birthday on Thursday and again a large number of guests was present and enjoyed a good bunco game.

Mr. and Mrs. Adam Schilling celebrated their fifteenth wedding anniversary on Friday. Games were played and a splendid dinner was served at midnight. The many guests wished the generous couple many more anniversaries.

A very pretty wedding took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Adam Quasthoff at Ravenswood last Wednesday. Their daughter, Emma was married to Mr. Ben Fish, the Rev. Wm. Greve, pastor of the Bachelors' Grove Lutheran church officiating. The Quasthoff's were former residents of Goesselville. At present they are operating greenhouses near the Rosehill Cemetery and are doing very nicely.

A party was held on Friday eve in honor of Marie Bormet's birthday. Many friends were present and all had an enjoyable evening.

The TRUANT SOUL

by Victor Rousseau

"HE'S A BEAST"

SYNOPSIS.—Nurses in the Southern hospital at Avonmouth are angered by the insolent treatment accorded them by Dr. John Lancaster, head of the institution, and there is a general feeling of unrest, into which Joan Wentworth, probationary nurse, is drawn. Doctor Lancaster is performing a difficult operation, for which he has won fame. Joan, with other nurses, is in attendance.

"That scalp—quick!" he cried. Joan started and stretched out her hands toward the tray, which gleamed afar off, elusively through a black cloud.

"The one I handed you. Don't stare at me like a fool!"

Joan bent over the tray, putting out one hand to the table to support herself. She was conscious that everything was suspended and that everyone was watching her. In the interminable interval she heard the patient's gasping sighs, as if he was breathing the last wisps of life away.

She fingered the instruments in the tray feebly and nervously, and her hands seemed numb and useless. Her fingers closed on something and brought it out. Then Lancaster's hand closed over hers, tore it away, and flung it back with a splash. Joan's hand dropped to her side, paralyzed by the painful pressure. The next instant Lancaster had the scalp and whirled swiftly back toward the table, upsetting the bichloride, which lapped over the patient's feet.

The moments went by like hours. At last Joan became aware, through the sudden unraveling of the suspense, that the crux of the operation was over. Her head grew clear again. She saw the assistant surgeons unfastening the artery clamps. The head nurse rose to her feet, not looking at the patient. Joan realized that she was crying, and her strong, epicene face looked grotesque in grief. The orderly came up, and together they placed the patient on the stretcher. And suddenly Joan knew that the man was dead.

As the stretcher was wheeled out of the theater Lancaster turned toward his visitors.

"A very successful piece of work," he said. "It's a pity the poor fellow will never know how much I have done for him."

Joan felt the visiting surgeons' disgust at the execrable jest. Lancaster seemed to sense it, too.

"Thank you," he continued, "the best of surgeons is not proof against the stupidity of a nurse."

And he turned upon Joan fiercely. "What is your name?" he demanded.

"Miss Wentworth, Doctor Lancaster."

"Well, you're no use here. You're wasting your time. You've killed a man this morning," he bellowed. "If I can't have women about me with rational heads on their shoulders I'll get a gang of Chinese chop suey men. Get out and earn your living as a stenographer or saleslady. That's all your talents are fit for, Miss Wentworth!"

Joan looked at him in amazement. At his first words, at his tone, she had felt the shock of anger in her heart gather itself and leap to meet his own. But his rage frightened her, her head ached, and she was sick from the fumes which still penetrated the theater. She tried to answer him, but could not utter a word and broke into tears instead, sobbing in complete nervous abandonment.

Lancaster turned from her with a wry face. "Well, gentlemen," he said, with an affectation of jovialness, "better luck next time. I'm sorry the operation was not successful, but, after all, the patient's life is not the principal thing. The method was correct, you see, but I did not reckon on an incompetent assistant."

"Put the blame on the anesthetic, Doctor Lancaster," said a white-bearded surgeon, with chivalrous intent. "With a nephritis history operation's useless. Better let them die peacefully."

"I did not quite grasp the technical innovation you spoke of, Doctor Lancaster," said another. "To my mind it was the original Leonard operation, except that—"

"Why did you divide the arterial coats below the site of the aneurism?" queried a third.

Lancaster led them from the theater, expostulating and explaining. The dark-haired girl lingered with the sponges. The assistant surgeons had already gone hurriedly out. Joan put her tray away. She still was unable to control her sobs.

Suddenly Lancaster reappeared, furious after the cross-examination to which he had been subjected. He came straight toward Joan with a face of malice. Unconscious of her pitiful aspect as a child might have been, she raised her streaming face and looked at him.

"You had no right to speak to me like that, whatever I did," she said.

"Whatever you did? Whatever you failed to do! What do you think you are here for?" he stormed.

He glared at her, turned away, hesitated, and then came back.

"That's just the way with you women," he cried. "You lost that case for me. And now you are thinking about your dignity. You shouldn't have taken up a nurse's vocation. You women don't know what you can do and what you can't till you find yourselves in a post of responsibility, and then you fall down. What made you take up nursing, anyway? Thought our style of caps becoming, I suppose."

"I've done my best to qualify. I've never been blamed before."

"Well, you've made a big mistake," said Lancaster. "That's all. A—very—big—mistake," he added, emphasizing each word with a nod. "And my work and patients' lives are too important to allow mistakes to happen. You're too pretty to be a nurse, anyway," he added in a lower tone.

"You don't need to tell me that, Doctor Lancaster!" cried Joan furiously.

He made a gesture of mock despair. "That's right; get on your high horse again!" he said. "Just remember that I'm at the head of the Southern hospital, and what I say goes, that's all."

He swung upon his heel and went out of the room, leaving her gripping the table fiercely in her humiliation. The dark-haired girl, who had been fussing in a corner, came up to her.

"He's a beast!" she exclaimed passionately. "He hates women—decent women. My! if he'd dared to speak that way to me I'd have told him what I thought of him, right in the middle of the operation. I don't care for anybody when my temper's up. I could tell you a few things I've heard about him if I were minded to. Do you know he went on a five years' spree once?"

"I don't care what he did!" cried Joan passionately.

"Well, I guess you could make it your business to know," answered the other. "A girl's got to fight her way, the same as a man. He threw up his job and just went away for five years, drinking and living with tramps, and then had the nerve to come back as if nothing had happened. I got it from a girl that used to be friendly with him. He's—"

She broke off abruptly as the orderly appeared with his rubber broom and bucket.

"What are you going to do about it?" inquired the girl in a low voice. "I reckon you don't want to forfeit your diploma any more than the rest of us. Listen! You go and see him."

"Never!" said Joan.

"Don't be a fool, Miss Wentworth! You go and see him at his house. It's what anyone would do in your place. Fool him by making him think he can do what he likes with you, play with him and hold him off by hook or crook until you're graduated, and then laugh at him. I'd do it if I had to. My! if you heard some of the stories that are going round—"

The head nurse beckoned at the door. "The lady superintendent wants to see you at once, Miss Wentworth," she said. "You're to go right into her office."

She looked at Joan resentfully. Her face was quite composed again, but her eyes were reddened. She knew that Lancaster had been at fault, but she had seen Joan's blunder, too. Miss Symons was one of those women who can acquire the faculty of a man's strength without losing their own sex. She was a tower of strength toward weakness, but she had no pity for a lapse of duty.

Joan walked the dreary length of the corridor to the lady superintendent's room. The white-haired woman was seated at her desk, pretending to be making up her accounts and composing herself for the interview.

"Miss Wentworth!" she began, turning round in her chair as Joan appeared at the door. "You have made Doctor Lancaster very angry. He said you are totally inefficient. What was it that happened this morning?"

"The ether made me faint and I couldn't see the instruments for a moment, and Doctor Lancaster happened to want a scalp quickly," answered Joan.

"Well, it's a great pity," said the other, "because it was your first day and we had to get somebody to take Miss Martin's place and I selected you because I relied on you particularly. Anyway, you are suspended."

Joan looked at her stupefied. "You mean—that—I am to leave the hospital and lose my diploma?" she asked.

"I don't know yet," answered the lady superintendent evasively. "I suppose Doctor Lancaster will decide that later after he has laid the matter before the board at their next meeting and looked over your record. Anyway, Miss Wentworth, you may as well take a holiday for a week or so until you hear from us."

She turned back to her books while Joan, after looking at her for a moment in silence, turned and went into the corridor. She made her way toward the hospital entrance. And the great wooden arch, through which she had passed hundreds of times without noticing it, suddenly became vivid with detail; the hospital, which had been a part of her unconscious life, looked strange and new to her.

Chapter II

Joan had a room in a nurses' boarding house a few minutes' walk away. She walked mechanically homeward, hardly even yet realizing the magnitude of the blow which had befallen her. Avonmouth lay almost deserted in the noontide glare. The shuttered houses, gay with striped awnings, looked down on the white, dusty streets. The little park that contained the Confederate monument was bright with geraniums, but the grass was parched and withered, and the feeble efforts of an automatic sprinkler seemed almost instantly absorbed by the thirsty ground.

Joan made her way toward an overhanging tree, brushed away a prickly caterpillar from a seat beneath it, and sat down. She was trying to estimate the magnitude of the catastrophe that had happened to her, to free herself from the stupefied wonder and passionate resentment that held her. Two hours before life had seemed reasonably bright; now its entire course was changed. For she did not doubt that the lady superintendent had been trying to soften the news of her dismissal.

Her mind ran back to the beginning of all things for her—her father's death. That had happened ten years before, and the mortgage on the estate, ruined after the war, had grown like a spreading weed, eating away field after field, until it swallowed everything except nine hundred dollars. After the enforced sale, Mrs. Wentworth and her daughter had gone to Avonmouth for the sole reason that the mother remembered a wealthy godmother there, distantly related, whose activities she hoped to enlist on behalf of her daughter. It was characteristic of her that she should not have known the woman had died six years previously.

Still, Avonmouth was the nearest large town in which a girl, flung on the world untrained, might hope to support two people. Joan had long before wanted to be a nurse. She decided to attempt to enter a hospital; but now her mother's slow, mortal illness kept her nursing her at home. Six months after their arrival Mrs. Wentworth died. What remained of their nine hundred dollars after the doctor's and funeral expenses had been paid would suffice for Joan's meager needs until she had graduated from the Southern hospital. But the physician who attended Mrs. Wentworth, in her last illness had secured the girl a position as a probationer, and Joan was as happy as she could expect to be. Since that date he had moved away, and Joan was altogether alone.

At home they had known hardly anyone, for the whole region was in that condition of resettlement that began in the seventies and is still proceeding. Their friends had scattered to the north and west; their letters had long since ceased. Prosperity, stalking through the nation, had left a little ridge of poverty between the foothills of its progress through the foothills of the back country. In Avonmouth Mrs. Wentworth's illness, and afterward, the hospital work, had kept the girl both from making friends and from the realization of her need of them. Her whole mind was set upon obtaining that diploma which would mean an assured living, and before her eyes was ever the spectacle of such poverty as she had known at home among others and had seen approaching her mother. After she graduated, perhaps, life might begin to unfold before her eyes. But even this she realized only vaguely; she lived altogether in the moment.

It's plain that Joan is a nice girl, but Dr. Lancaster seems to be no good, either as surgeon or man.

Cuckoo Superstitions

There are numerous superstitions associated with the hearing of the cuckoo's first call. In the maritime highlands and Hebrides if the cuckoo is first heard by one who has not broken his fast some misfortune is expected. Indeed, besides the danger, it is considered a reproach to one to have heard the cuckoo while hungry, says the Detroit News.

In France to hear the cuckoo for the first time fasting is to make the hearer "an idle do-nothing for the rest of the year" or "to numb his limbs" for the same period. There is a similar belief in certain parts of the west of England. In Northumberland one is told, if walking on a hard road when the cuckoo first calls, that the ensuing season will be full of calamity. To be on soft ground is a lucky omen.

There are 95 different kinds of Brussels sprouts, 120 kinds of lettuce and 194 varieties of carrots.

HOW TO SOLVE A CROSS-WORD PUZZLE

When the correct letters are placed in the white spaces this puzzle will spell words both vertically and horizontally. The first letter in each word is indicated by a number, which refers to the definition listed below the puzzle. Thus No. 1 under the column headed "horizontal" defines a word which will fill the white spaces up to the first black square to the right, and a number under "vertical" defines a word which will fill the white squares to the next black one below. No letters go in the black spaces. All words used are dictionary words, except proper names. Abbreviations, slang, initials, technical terms and obsolete forms are indicated in the definitions.

AN OPERATION RECOMMENDED

Avoided by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Los Angeles, Cal.—"I cannot give too much praise to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for what it has done for me. My mother gave it to me when I was a girl 14 years old, and since then I have taken it when I feel run down or tired. I took it for three months before my two babies were born for I suffered with my back and had spells as if my heart was affected, and it helped me a lot. The doctors told me at one time that I would have to have an operation. I thought I would try 'Pinkham's,' as I call it, first. In two months I was all right and had no operation. I firmly believe 'Pinkham's' cured me. Every one who saw me after that remarked that I looked so well. I only have to take medicine occasionally, not but I always keep a couple of bottles by me. I recommend it to women who speak to me about their health. I have also used your Sanative Wash and like it very much."—Mrs. E. GOULD, 4000 East Side Boulevard, Los Angeles, Cal.

Many letters have been received from women who have been restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound after operations have been advised.

STAMMERING AND STUTTERING

EVERY schoolboy knows the story of Demosthenes. As a boy he stammered. He could not pronounce the letter "R." So he put pebbles in his mouth and practiced speaking on the seashore and became, in time, the greatest orator in Athens.

Stammering and stuttering are probably as old as human speech. The boy who stutters today has just as much trouble with his "R" as Demosthenes had three thousand years ago. He can overcome his trouble as Demosthenes did, if he will work as hard to train his tongue and his lips.

Some impediments of speech are due to physical defects, such as tongue-tie, hare-lip, cleft palate and others. But there is nothing wrong with the vocal machinery of the child who stutters. His machine is all right, but he can't control it.

Any person, when surprised, confused or shocked by some unexpected occurrence, will stammer. Why? Because he is confused. His mind is not working clearly, and his brain is sending contrary orders to his tongue and his lips. That is the condition of the stutterer. From fright, embarrassment or habit, his talking muscles, when he tries to use them, are seized by a spasm and produce a series of senseless, confused sounds instead of clear, definite speech. This is generally due to lack of confidence and self-control, so that the cause of stuttering is really the mental condition of the child. The principal reason why a child stutters is because he is afraid he will stutter.

Punishment by parents or teachers or ridicule by playmates only increase this fear. The child ceases to talk, except when compelled to. Other people avoid talking to him, until talking, instead of a natural, unconscious habit, becomes an agony of effort.

Stammering is a temporary inability to speak. Stuttering is the repetition in rapid succession of the same syllable or word. In one case he can't get started; in the other he starts but can't go on.

In either case, the child's speech mechanism is defective, not in construction but in action. He must be taught slowly, gently, and patiently how to run his speech machine smoothly, evenly and without effort.

Stutterers must learn to take time to consider what they are going to say before they speak. Most children with speech defects are impulsive. They must learn self-control. They must learn to speak slowly, distinctly and regularly. They should practice reading aloud every day. They should practice the vowels, just as a singer practices her scales. Then short combinations of letters should be practiced, at first slowly and the speed rapidly increased.

Above all, stammering children should be developed physically by sleep, good food, outdoor play and exercise, for anything which makes the child stronger and more confident helps to do away with the fear which is the cause of the affliction.

WASHING THE HANDS IN ECZEMA

EVERYBODY knows what eczema is. Almost everyone, sometime or other, has had some personal experience with it. It is especially liable to attack the hands. During the cold months of winter, almost everyone has chapped hands or wrists. This is simply a mild, local, temporary form of eczema, in which the skin, irritated by the cold air and the soap and water of frequent washings, becomes dry and irritated and finally cracks and bleeds. Everyone knows that under such circumstances soap and water will not only fail to clean the skin but will also irritate it all the more and so make the skin worse.

Eczema of the fingers or hands is also found in many occupations where the skin is subject to special irritation. So one of the first things the doctor tells his patients is not to use soap and water on the irritated skin. Instead, he advises them to clean their hands with oil, so as to prevent the irritation from the soap.

But the oil alone does not cleanse the hands and is apt to leave a disagreeable oiliness, so that the patient's hands not only look dirty but feel dirty as well.

To remedy this, Doctor Glaze, in a recent article, gives the following method for cleaning the hands in cases of eczema.

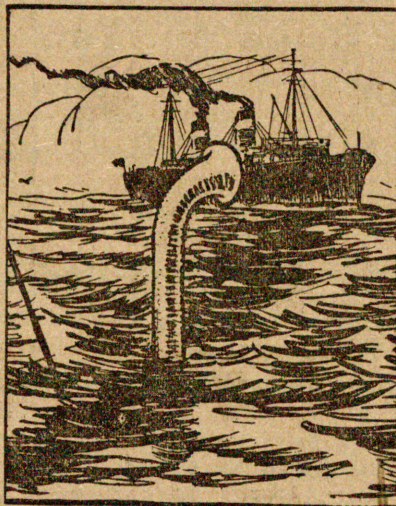

The patient is advised to get a supply of oil of sweet almonds or olive oil, preferably in a shaker such as barbers use to sprinkle bay rum, hair tonic and other liquids on the hair. In a separate container is put the yolk of an egg. One egg yolk will be enough for 20 or 30 times.

A liberal quantity of oil is poured into the palm of the hand and thoroughly but gently smoothed and worked into the skin. Then a small amount of egg yolk is added and the two substances are briskly worked together into a lather exactly the same as soap. A few drops of water added will make a thin creamy fluid with which the hands are thoroughly rubbed. They are then rinsed off with cold water. This method cleans the hands and leaves the skin soft and white without any visible oiliness.

"OLD-SALT" TALES

By CAPTAIN IRA PERKINS

(Copyright.)

"Minute"

"THERE are many good names for him," said Captain Ira, as he stroked the velvet-smooth muzzle of Tommy Radnor's new pony. Meanwhile, the other nine boys of the club had gathered around and were admiring the sleek little fellow. All sorts of names were suggested. Finally, Bobby Treat asked the captain if he didn't know of some famous pony after which Tommy's might be named.

"Yes, several of them," replied Captain Ira. "There was one in particular. They waited for the captain to start. But he stayed silent for a time. Reaching out for a clover blossom he pulled it from the stem. Then he plucked out a thumb and finger full of the little pink petals and sucked the honey-sap from the base of them. There was a far-away look in his eyes.

"Boys," he said at last, "I'm about to tell you of a famous pony. But he was a pony who never had his name in any printed story and he was not cited in any dispatch book. His fame now lives as a happy memory in the hearts of several thousand men. It is really a story of a half dozen parts. I'll only tell you of the one which I know best, today. Some other time, if you like, I'll tell the others.

"It was while the big war was going on. I was in command of an old P. & O. liner, which had been converted into a horse transport. Four trips we had made and, despite all the talk about submarines, our most exciting moments had been when a horse had broken loose now and then and started a ruction between decks.

"The fifth trip across began as uneventfully as the others. The only out of the ordinary thing had been the antics of a small bit of horseflesh which the hostlers had nicknamed, on account of his size, 'Minute.'

"How Minute ever won past the inspectors, I can't say. He was under size something like five hundred pounds. The shoe he wore was as dainty as a woman's wedding ring. In comparison to the average, after he'd known you for two minutes, he'd be nuzzling through your pockets for sugar lumps. And if you let him loose, he'd follow anywhere. One calm day I sighted him strolling along the forward hurricane deck, apparently with his mind made up to mount the bridge and visit me as soon as he could find the way up.

"From then on he was the ship pet. I had a stall rigged out for him in an unused runway between two cabins. Things went so far that the ship's tailor fashioned him a set of four soft rubber boots, so that he could walk the deck without slipping.

"Then the unexpected happened. Out of a clear sea, one night, a submarine popped its periscope. Next thing, a torpedo crashed into us. We started to sink. I had the lifeboats lowered. Our wireless sputtered a continuous S. O. S. for help. In about twenty minutes my ship slid gently into the sea, almost as though she were glad of the long rest which awaited her.

"It was a very dark night and, at my command, the boats had rowed away as fast as they could from the ship's side, so they would not be engulfed with her when she went under. Thus, after the ship had gone down, I found myself floating in the chilly sea, hampered from active swimming by my clothing, and with little hope of being able to keep on top until I should be picked up.

"There was a snort in the water beside me. It was Minute, as I found out later. Then, with a thankful heart, I seized hold of his mane. He was a strong swimmer and bore me easily until one of the boats found us. I was hauled aboard.

"Since the boat was a good-sized one and could easily bear his additional weight, it was decided to try and save Minute also. I'll never forget how patient he was, just as though he knew the danger he was in and that we would have trouble saving him. A makeshift tackle was at last put together and he was dragged aboard. You would have laughed to see how he looked with his feet waving free in the air and laced fast on them the ungainly rubber boots which the tailor had made for him.

"Later we were picked up and Minute was delivered to the army in France."

After the captain quit speaking, Tommy thought a bit. Then he said: "Do you mind if I call my pony 'Minute'?"

"No, indeed," replied Captain Ira. "And some other time I'll tell you more about Minute and his exploits in France."

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

PIG FAMILY NAME

"Brother Bacon," commenced Daddy, "who was a grandson of Porky Pig, decided that he would like to have a party.

"He is right," said Miss Ham, "we should let the whole world know that we are fond of ourselves."

"They've always known that," said Mrs. Duck, who had wobbled into the barnyard to hear the talk, "because they have called you pigs."

"We were called pigs long before they used the name to mean someone selfish," said Grandfather Porky.

"Maybe so," said Mrs. Duck. "I can't remember so far back. As long as I have known the barnyard you have always been called by the family name of pig. And as long as I can remember, all selfish, greedy people were called pigs."

"We got the name first," said Miss Ham, squealing angrily. "It's a good old family name, and we've never changed it."

"But how could selfish people ever have been called pigs if your family way, way back, had not been greedy?" asked Mr. Duck. "To be sure, you must have been given the name first in order that selfish creatures ever after could be called after you."

"You talk absurdly," said Miss Ham.

"Absurdly, grunt, grunt," said Brother Bacon.

"Absurdly, squeal, squeal," said Grandfather Porky Pig.

"Ridiculously, grunt, grunt," said Sammy Sausage.

"Senselessly, squeal, squeal," said Master Pink Pig.

"Senselessly, squeal, squeal," said Pinky Pig.

"Senselessly, squeal, squeal," said

"That Shows How Little You Know, Pinky Pig."

Pinky Pig's mother and Master Pink Pig's mother said the same.

"Mrs. Pink Pig and Mrs. Pinky Pig, wives of Master Pink Pig and Pinky Pig agreed with the others too.

"So did Sir Benjamin Bacon and Sir Percival Pork.

"Little Black Squealer agreed with the others too.

"They all agreed that Mrs. Duck had talked absurdly, and as she stood by them they all squealed and grunted and twisted their funny little tails and said over and over again,

"Simply absurd the way you talk Mrs. Duck."

"It's not absurd at all, quack, quack," said Mrs. Duck.

"Your family name is not a name of which to be proud. In fact, she added, 'I should be really quite uncomfortable if I had such a name.

"I don't know what I would do about it.

"I am indeed thankful that we have no name like that of Pig.

"I'd be mortified, which, pigs, means the same as ashamed, yes, I'd be terribly, horribly, wretchedly mortified.

"Thankful I am that I wasn't given such a greedy family name."

"Well," said Pinky Pig, "it's more of an honor than was ever paid you, Mrs. Duck."

"People are never called ducks. You're not even selfish ducks, you are simply of no account at all.

"No one could be named after you. You aren't of enough consequence."

"Indeed, quacked Mrs. Duck. "That shows how little you know, Pinky Pig."

"When things are lovely and when children are kind and nice you will often hear it said, 'Oh, isn't she a perfect duck!'"

"Now, what have you to say to that, pig family?"

"The pigs all walked away toward the mud in the pen. They had remembered hearing something about ducks that was nice, but they didn't want to tell Mrs. Duck so.

"I think we must be going," said Grandfather Porky. "Good-day!"

"Good-day," quacked Mrs. Duck, as she grinned. "Of course they had to be going," she said to herself. "They knew they were in the wrong, but they couldn't bear to admit it."

"She wobbled back to the duck pond to tell the others all about it, and the pigs went back to the pen. Brother Bacon had his party in which all the pigs joined, for they thought they needed a good meal and some comfort after such an extremely disagreeable talk!"

Grandfather a Methodist

"Isn't your grandfather an octogenarian, Ralph?" asked the visitor.

"No, ma'am," replied the little fellow. "he's a Methodist."

Your doctor advises internal cleanliness

HE WILL tell you that the first results of constipation—headache, sleepless nights, biliousness, backache, etc.—warn that the body is flooded with intestinal poisons. In time these poisons may cause the breakdown of health and lead to serious disease.

Laxatives and cathartics do not overcome constipation, says a noted authority, but by their continued use tend only to aggravate the condition and often lead to permanent injury.

Why Physicians Favour Lubrication

Medical science has found at last in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and thus hastens its passage through and out of the body. Thus, Nujol brings internal cleanliness.

Nujol is used in leading hospitals and is prescribed by physicians throughout the world. Nujol is not a medicine or laxative and cannot gripe. For sale by all druggists.

OPPORTUNITY IN AMERICA

WILLIAM E. KNOX

Radical demagogues sometimes accuse the capitalistic system with favoring the rich and powerful as against the poor and lowly. Fifty-three years ago an Irish lad of nine was brought to the United States by his parents. He went to the public schools and then began work as an office boy. A few days ago, on October 1, he was elected president of the American Bankers Association, the world's largest financial organization. He is president of one of the largest savings banks in the United States, the Bowers Savings Bank of New York City. This election of William E. Knox, who has risen from Irish immigrant to chief of American bankers, is the most striking reminder of the year of the democracy of opportunity in capitalistic America.

STRAIGHT TALKS WITH AUNT EMMY

On How Not to Make Out Checks

"The most annoying thing has happened, Aunt Emmy," exclaimed Helen. "I sent a check for $5 to the hospital to help them in their drive and some one cashed it. Isn't it a shame, for I simply can't afford to send another."

"I don't see how that could happen," said Aunt Emmy, "if you made out the check properly."

"Why, of course, I did," Helen said. "I made it out just as I always do, to 'bearer.'"

Aunt Emmy laughed. "No wonder you lost it!" she said. "Any one at all could cash a check made out like that. It's very careless of you to do it, no matter to whom the check is given. It would only take a few seconds to write the name of the payee properly. A check made out to 'bearer' may be cashed by any one who gets it. It is regrettable but true that not every one is honest. You know that lots of people would take a five dollar bill if they happened to find it. A check made payable to bearer or to 'cash' is just as tempting to them as a five dollar bill would be."

"But, Auntie, it was so frightfully mean to steal from the hospital!"

"You invited this particular theft by neglecting to make your check out properly," Aunt Emmy admonished Helen. "You may be glad your loss is no greater. Even when you go to the bank for money yourself you should not make your check payable to cash. Suppose you should lose it on the way? The same thing that happened to the hospital check might happen to it. Better take an extra minute and make the check out to yourself, sign your name to it as usual and endorse it just as though it were one you received from someone else."

"That seems like a lot of times to sign your own name on one little check, doesn't it, Auntie?" objected Helen.

"It's ever so much better to be on the safe side than to lose your money through carelessness," retorted Aunt Emmy.—Anne B. Aymes.

Government Does Not Own Reserve Bank

In the discussion of the Federal Reserve banks and their operations, undue emphasis has frequently been placed on their relation to the government, and they are frequently called "government banks." As a matter of fact, they are not "government banks" in a true sense, but are corporations organized under an act of Congress, and owned entirely by their member banks. The government does not hold a single share of their stock. The control of the banks' operations is also largely in the hands of the member banks, who elect two-thirds of the Federal Reserve bank directors, the remaining one-third being appointed by the government to represent the interest of the government and the public.

The Federal Reserve banks, it is true, are agents of the government in addition to their other activities, and in this capacity they must follow the instructions of the government in handling transactions which they perform simply as agents. We believe that it is important that the fact that a clear understanding of this point should be generally had, as many of the criticisms made against the Federal Reserve banks have been based on a misapprehension as to their relationship to the government.—American Bankers Association Journal.

MASTER FORGERS' TRICKS EXPOSED

The "Perfect Forgery" Always Has a Weak Spot That Leads to Penman's Downfall.

NATIONWIDE DRAGNET OUT

Bankers Working Together to Catch Crooks Who Cause Losses of $150,000,000 With Bad Checks Yearly.

A bogus check scheme that was so original, sound and business-like that it became known in detective circles as "the one perfect forgery," but finally, like all of them, led to its own inventor being trapped, is described by Reuben A. Lewis, Jr., in the American Bankers Association Journal. The article, which says forgeries cost the banks and business concerns at least $150,000,000 a year, deals with the ways of forgers and the relentless warfare being conducted against them by the bankers.

"Crime does not pay," Mr. Lewis says. "Soon the law reaches out and seizes the misguided operator who thinks he can get away with it. For one of the peculiar things about the forger is that, while he may devise a clever scheme that brings a rich return on its initial trial, he continues to work it until caught."

"Fortunately, there appears to be a weak spot in the best laid scheme. And just as soon as this weak spot is uncovered, it is broadcast to all the banks in the land. So the banks, informed as to the method of approach that the forger will make, and the little peculiarities of the job, are on the alert to nab him when he makes his next reappearance."

The King of Forgers

"The 'master forger' is William Hamilton Harkins, probably the most dangerous operator known to the banking world. Several times in the toils of the law, Harkins has managed to escape. The daring 'king' of the forgers made a confession that he had defrauded banks of more than $300,000 during the years of his career."

"His scheme follows a certain set pattern. The key to Harkins' plan is obtaining a blank check from the checkbook of a well known firm. Recently Harkins sauntered into the office of a granite dealer. He ordered a monument and tendered a check for a substantial part of the memorial. He requested the proprietor of the store to permit him to dash off a letter to his folks at home. Seizing a propitious moment, Harkins spotted his checkbook, noted the exact balance, tore out a sheet of checks and disappeared."

"Reproducing the proprietor's signature, Harkins drew up a sizeable check. On the reverse side he inscribed his alias as the payee and then added after 'O. K.' the facsimile of the depositor's signature. This acted as an identification indorsement, so when he presented the check at the bank it was readily cashed."

"The Weak Spot
"This weak spot in Harkins' scheme is the identification indorsement. If the teller, before cashing any check bearing this alleged indorsement, telephoned to the depositor and checked up on its issuance, the scheme would have short shrift."

Banks throughout the country have been put on guard against Harkins and his plan and it is believed he cannot operate long without again falling into the net. The scheme that was pronounced unbeatable was devised by a forger known as F. Mayer and centered around the certified check fraud, Mr. Lewis says, continuing:

"F. Mayer would open accounts with four or five banks in a sizeable city. The largest account ran around $5,000. By kiting checks back and forth between the several banks, he would establish his identity with the tellers and become known as a man accustomed to deal in large figures."

"After conducting these preliminaries for a few weeks, Mayer would go to the bank where he had his largest account and ask that a certified check be issued to him for substantially all of the money remaining to his credit. From the genuine check, he would make four or five duplicates."

"In turn, Mayer would visit the other banks, where he had established small accounts. Inasmuch as he had cashed checks for some time, Mayer generally had little trouble in getting the banks to honor the certified checks. If a teller took the precaution of calling the issuing bank on the telephone to inquire if it had made out such a certified check, he would gain confirmation."

The Forger Caught
"But even the 'perfect' forgery scheme cannot be worked with impunity. Mayer succeeded in defrauding Kansas City banks out of $27,000 and made his escape. A few months later he was walking down the streets of Los Angeles when a teller who had honored one of the bogus checks in the middle western city recognized him. Mayer took to his heels with the former teller in hot pursuit, and the criminal lost."

The losses sustained through forgeries by banks may be mainly attributed to the failure of the tellers to observe the rules against cashing checks for strangers or allowing depositors to draw on uncollected items. "A relentless, sustained hunt is conducted to apprehend the forgers. The new twists, the variations in the methods, the latest ruses used are followed by the detectives. The modes of operation are broadcasted throughout the country," the article declares. "The American Bankers Association alone, through its Protective Division, spends more than $100,000 a year to check deceptions against banks."

MOKENA

A large company of relatives and friends pleasantly reminded Mr. and Mrs. August Werner of their seventh wedding anniversary on Thursday night.

As this is near the Valentine season the rooms were prettily decorated with hearts and streamers. Games were played and a general good time was enjoyed. At 8 o'clock a mock wedding took place which caused much merriment.

At mid night a luncheon of ice cream, cake, fruit, etc., was served to about 25 guests. The tables were prettily decorated with hearts at each guests' place.

As this was also Mrs. Werner's birthday a large birthday cake was given a place of honor in the center of the table and later served to the guests. All present had a real time and wish Mr. and Mrs. Werner many more such occasions.

Mrs. Wm. Semmler is on the sick list with an attack of grip.

The Ladies Aid of the Mokena M. E. church sponsored a public bunco party at the Wm. Semmler residence on Wednesday night and which was well attended. Prizes were awarded and refreshments were served.

Mr. Courtner and family who have been occupying the Wm. Semmler residence moved on Monday into the residence on the former E. V. Maltby farm north of town.

George Koeller, Sr., who recently underwent an operation is convalescing very nicely.

Miss Minnie Scheer who has been quite ill is somewhat improved.

Mrs. E. P. Krapp is visiting in Minnesota.

George Megarry and family are moving into the Wm. Semmler residence vacated by the Courtner family.

Harvey Frick has gone on a trip to Washington.

Mrs. Albert Broun entertained the 500 club at her home on Friday evening.

New Lenox Man Loses Fight For Control of Estate

G. L. Hilton, former postmaster and merchant of New Lenox, aged 73 years, lost his fight in the Will County probate court Tuesday to have his cousin, A. N. Hilton removed as conservator of his estate. In December 1923 the court appointed A. N. Hilton to take care of his aged relative's affairs when it was discovered that the aged man had a large amount of money and valuable papers stored away in a safe in his home, as he did not trust to place his valuables in a bank. He was found to have an elaborate burglar system and a number of guns handy for protection, but it is doubtful whether he would be able to use them in case of emergency.

Mr. Hilton has resented the appointment of his cousin as conservator and finally took the matter up with his attorney D. R. Anderson and his petition for a hearing was filed in the probate court and on Tuesday the matter went before a jury. Mr. Hilton maintained he was fully able to take care of his own affairs. Sixteen witnesses of New Lenox were called in to testify as to his competency. When Mr. Hilton was put on the stand he was able to answer some of the questions put to him, but he was not able to answer some to the satisfaction of the jury who returned their verdict against him after being out 15 minutes. The jury found that Mr. Hilton was not fully competent to handle his affairs and that the conservator be retained.

A. N. Hilton, the conservator was unable to attend the hearing on account of illness. He was represented by O. A. Laraway.

Where U. S. Farm Products Go

Products of the American farm go to every civilized country of the world. Out of the United States each year is sent approximately one-half of the total cotton crop, one-fourth of the yield of the wheat fields, one-fifth of the porkers and huge quantities of corn and tobacco, dried fruits and other products of field and feed lot.

The accompanying chart, prepared by the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation, shows where the principal exports go.

In the United Kingdom more of America's farm exports are consumed than in any other nation. The United Kingdom uses more American cotton than any other country, her annual consumption averaging around 1,580,916 bales. Germany is in the market for almost as much cotton, using 1,011,814 pounds last year. The United Kingdom is the first market for American wheat and flour, tobacco, corn sirup and condensed milk. She also takes large quantities of dried fruits, oil cake, meat, meat products and corn.
